

WORKING BRIEF · INTERNAL REVIEW

Toward The Eternal Standard

A First Pass on Brand, Marketing, and Public Relations for Eternal Life Hospice

PREPARED BY DENISE CHAVEZ FOR ALEKSANDRA DUBINA · MAY 2026

Aleksandra,

I wanted to give you a clear overview of where our time together and my research took me and where my head is before we create a full brand, marketing, and public relations plan.

What started as a sound bath idea and a flyer could evolve into something powerful for Eternal. What follows is a first pass — drawn from our meetings and the research that followed — yours to read, sit with, and consider in your own time. My skills are committed to this work. When and how we make it formal is yours to set.

You and I started by reviewing what Eternal Life Hospice already has: the presentation folder, rack cards, service messaging, founder letter, visual direction, care pillars, and brand language. The materials already have strong emotional value. The strongest existing lines are "Care That Honors Life," "We are here. Always," "Same-day admission," and "24/7 nurse line." The three care pillars — physician-led care, respiratory care, and integrative therapies — also give Eternal a strong clinical and family-facing foundation.

What became clear is that the current kit explains what Eternal does. The next version needs to go further: it needs to explain what Eternal stands for.

That is why I landed on The Eternal Standard.

The Eternal Standard is not a certification, accreditation, or legal claim. It is the central platform that can guide the rebrand, the marketing copy, the media kit, the website, the social media language, the referral partner materials, and, should you choose to move forward with it, the public relations campaign.

In simple terms, The Eternal Standard means this:

THE ETERNAL STANDARD

Patients and families deserve dignity, clarity, comfort, and protection during one of life's most vulnerable moments.

Everything we create from this point forward should ladder back to that idea.

The Eternal Standard gives Eternal Life Hospice a more elevated position. Instead of presenting the agency as simply another hospice provider, we are positioning Eternal as a dignity-centered hospice brand built around clinical confidence, family guidance, whole-person comfort, responsive presence, and compliance-conscious care.

This also allows us to connect the brand to who you are as an independent businesswoman and as an operator, without overstating anything or making the story feel defensive.

This is also the clear differentiator from larger institutional providers. Those systems often deliver hospice care through scale and protocol. Eternal Life is something different: founder-led, independent, and built around whole-person integrative support.

The Eternal Standard is not only reflected in the care model. It is reflected in how you operate when things are difficult. It is reflected in the way you have worked to keep the engine running, keep services supported, and make sure patients and families are not left exposed during one of the most vulnerable times anyone can face.

We will not present that in a boastful way. We will weave it in carefully and with restraint. But it matters, because it shows that The Eternal Standard is not just language. It is how you lead.

This is also why we need to be clear about how the two agencies sit.

Westlake Village Hospice is your anchor agency and has been affected by the broader payment suspension. That story needs to remain factual, quiet, and carefully reviewed for now. What matters for this brief is the way you have worked to protect patients, support continuity, and keep families from feeling exposed during one of the most vulnerable times anyone can face. When the time is right, that deeper story can become a quiet illustration of the kind of operator and independent businesswoman you have always been.

Eternal Life Hospice is the separate operating and future-facing brand. That is where we build the rebrand, the marketing kit, the referral partner materials, and the forward-facing thought-leadership platform.

You are the bridge between the two. We are positioning you as a standard-bearer: a founder and operator who protects dignity when families, patients, staff, and systems are under pressure.

The story we are telling is that a hospice founder is leading with patient dignity, continuity of care, family protection, and a vision for the future of end-of-life care.

This is how we elevate you properly.

Two Tracks

TRACK ONE

Rebrand and Marketing

This means updating the current Eternal Life materials so that every front-facing piece is rooted in The Eternal Standard. The existing folder and rack cards do not need to be thrown away. They need to be refined. The language should become more intentional, more consistent, and more elevated.

- "Care That Honors Life" remains the emotional brand promise.
- "We are here. Always." remains the reassurance promise.
- "The First 72 Hours" becomes the practical family and referral partner guide.
- "Compliance is patient protection" becomes the professional-facing message.

TRACK TWO

Public Relations

Should you opt to take this on, this is where we build your authority carefully and in stages. We do not start by chasing national press. We start by protecting the entity distinction, cleaning up the message, preparing the media kit, strengthening referral partner trust, and then moving outward into local, regional, trade, podcast, award, and national opportunities.

The goal is not to make noise. The goal is to make Eternal Life Hospice clear, trusted, and properly understood.

Here is the path I believe we should follow.

STEP ONE Clarification

We confirm all legal names, entity distinctions, licensing language, service areas, credentials, phone numbers, address, insurance language, and claims before anything public is distributed.

STEP TWO Message Alignment

We update all copy so Eternal Life is consistently presented through The Eternal Standard: dignity, clinical confidence, family guidance, whole-person comfort, responsive support, and compliance-conscious care.

STEP THREE Marketing Kit Revision

We revise the current folder and rack cards so the copy feels unified and intentional. The materials should no longer feel like separate service sheets. They should feel like parts of one larger standard of care.

STEP FOUR The Soft Launch

We update the website, LinkedIn, Google Business Profile, social media, referral emails, and printed materials so every public surface speaks with one voice before referral conversations and press begin.

STEP FIVE Referral Partner Reassurance

Hospitals, discharge planners, physicians, SNFs, assisted living communities, care managers, and professional partners need simple, calm, consistent language. They need to understand that Eternal Life Hospice is separate, operational, and focused on dignity-centered care.

STEP SIX Media Kit Development

We add the missing strategic pages: your founder bio, Eternal Life fact sheet, entity clarification sheet, The Eternal Standard one-pager, The First 72 Hours guide, approved quote bank, media Q&A, speaker sheet, press release, and referral partner insert.

STEP SEVEN Local Credibility

We start with local and regional business and community outlets where the story is strongest: Westlake Village, Ventura County, Conejo Valley, Los Angeles, and Orange County.

STEP EIGHT Professional Authority

We move into healthcare trade press, hospice podcasts, senior care platforms, referral partner education, and speaking opportunities.

STEP NINE National Elevation

Only after the proof is strong do we pursue national consumer, business, and healthcare outlets. At that stage, the story becomes larger: how hospice can rebuild trust, why families need clarity before crisis, and why dignity must be protected at the end of life.

The key message is this:

THE KEY MESSAGE

Eternal Life Hospice is not just providing hospice care. Eternal Life is advancing The Eternal Standard — a dignity-centered approach to how families should be guided, supported, protected, and cared for during the final chapter of life.

This is the foundation I believe can carry the rebrand, the marketing, the public relations strategy, the referral partner campaign, your founder profile, and your long-term public positioning.

Our job now is to make sure every piece of communication reflects that standard.

- The folder should reflect it.
- The rack cards should reflect it.
- The website should reflect it.
- The media kit should reflect it.
- Your interviews should reflect it.
- Referral partner conversations should reflect it.

The public relations campaign should reflect it, if and when you decide to move forward with that track.

The result is a unified brand and leadership platform: Eternal Life Hospice as the forward-facing dignity-centered hospice agency, and you as the founder leading The Eternal Standard with clarity, compassion, discipline, and care.

This is how we present Eternal properly.

This is how we protect the distinction between the agencies.

And this is how we begin elevating you into the leadership position the story deserves.

On your word, an Aquarian and a Virgo gracefully hit the ground running — together.

With care,

Denise
